“Afternoon tea was traditionally referred to as ‘low tea’, named after the low coffee tables on which afternoon tea was served.

According to legend, one of Queen Victoria’s Ladies in Waiting, Anna Maria Stanhope, also known as the Duchess of Bedford, is credited as being the creator of the afternoon tea tradition.

During an era when it was common to have a small lunch, by midafternoon the Duchess would suffer from feeling light-headed.

In an effort to sustain herself throughout the afternoon, the Duchess introduced the indulgence of afternoon tea.

A tradition that has continued until present day.

The British tradition of afternoon tea has been a fashionable social event, a time for ladies and gentleman to pause and enjoy the afternoon. The choice of several varieties of tea and a delicious menu combine to make for an unforgettable experience.”
